Louis Napoleon accomplished ladies in the South: cannot fail to perceive the weakness of his ally. and who will say that the consciousness of the advantage he thus has over the ancient rival of his nation may not revive the hereditary hatred to the race, and prompt him, by an invasion of England, at once to effect the insults cast upon conquered France, and avenge the indignities heaped on his renowned uncle. He is eminently distinguished for the faithfulness with which he keeps his own counsels and casts around his purposes an they are ripe for execution. Cool, deliberate. and impassable, he seems to stand self-reliant and alone, weither claiming nor yielding sympa thy to mortal man. To be suspected of evi intent is the penalty that attaches to deliberate concealment, and of the sincerity of Louis Napoleon's friendship for England is doubted, the suspicion results from his well-known characteristic habit of shrouding his thoughts and his plans in the most profound mystery. It may be that the wilv Frenchman does not intend ope rupture with Eugland until he has got her embarrassed and powerless for successful resis ance. As cumning knaves often effect the ruit gence in extravagance, folly, and even crime, so may Napoleon design to accomplish the downfall of Euglish supremacy by involving that matton in wasting, expensive, and impolitic wars. If this is the purpose cherished by the French Emperor in his secret heart, then would it accord weil with that design could be succeed n involving England in a war with this country It may well be supposed that the Frenchman freest nations of the earth engaged in the dedevastating each other's commerce on the high seas and obstructing each other's career of progress in the attainment of increased wealth, power, and glory.

Lord Clarendon announced in the British Parliament that the arrangements between France and England extend to every quarter of the globe; the newspapers of that country utter the same sentiment, and the London Standard embroilment with Spain about Cuba, holds this emphatic language: "We do not think that England has sufficient interest in the matter to justify an armed interference; but our ally may nagine that she is more deeply conc of she acts we are bound to support her." This that if the United States undertake to wres on the will and pleasure of the French Empe and England. How the Frenchman would decide in such an event is not matter of much donbt. Nothing would suit his purposes better than to set Englishmen and Americans by the cars, and see them engaged in cutting each other's throats, and wasting their substance. Note of the English soldiers that I have yet seen are provided with loots. The Russ an soldiers all have boots. The English soldiers above speak of the arrival, just now, of winter clothing, sheep-skins, boots, &c., and wooden houses that have been brought out from England and are being put up for the sick, many of whom, antil now, have been kept in tents; also of the extreme difficulty of transporting provisions &c., from Balakhava to the camp, the draft-horses being worn completely out by hard work. I may inform you that the daily allow ance of a Russian soldier in Sebastopol is three pounds of bread, one pound of fresh beef in any p, a portion of grav (a kind) of farina portidge), and two glasses of brandy.

The anti-American organs, here and elsewhere, in their zeal against the American party of Cincin ati and for the foreign party of that city, have represented that the Cheinnat Germans, when firing the cannon that becamp the object of so much strife, were merely firing in honor of the birthday of Jefferson. The Americans believed, and acted upon the belief, that the Germans were firing the gun as a signal for the rallying of their countrymen for a conflict.

Americans helieved, and acted upon the belief, that the Germans were firing the gun as a signal for the rallying of their countrymen for a conflict.

Now the representations given of this matter by the anti-American organis are certainly without foundation. Let the circumstances be considered for a moment. The native-born voters were excluded or at least said to be excluded from the eleventh Ward polls of Cincinnati. A fierce fightenned between the natives on the one part and the foreign-born population on the other, which lasted more than half an hour, weapons of all descriptions being freely used. An excited and wrathful crowd of thousands was assembled all around. The American party was at leight victorious in the conflict, and loud proclamation was made that the polls were open to all legal voters. Almost immediately therefor a light victorious in the conflict, and loud proclamation was made that the polls were open to all legal voters. Almost immediately therefore a light victorious in the conflict, and loud proclamation on the possession of the Germans of the hill directly in the rear of the polls, and a great vith was observed among the Germans. The Americans had no doubt but that it was a rallying signal, and we do not see how any candid man of sense can prevail upon himself to suppose that the Germans at such a moment of the hill directly in the rear of the polls, and a great vith was observed among the Germans. The Americans had no doubt but that it was a rallying signal, and we do not see how any candid man of sense can prevail upon himself to suppose that the Germans at such a momen rallying signal, and we do not see how any candid man of sense can prevail upon himself to suppose that the Germanis at such a moment and in such a spot and under such circumstances were celebrating the anniversary of Jefferson's birthday! When in Cincinnati or Louisville or New York or Boston or Philadelphia or Baltimore or any other city of the Union were the Germanis ever before known even to pretend to celebrate with the firing of cannon the birthday of Thomas Jefferson? How came such a celebration to be thought of for the first time by the Cincinnati Germans on the late election day and England will be forced to continue, contrary to her interests and her inclinations, in a war from the result of which she can derive no advantage not now possessed by her. War and glory are just as necessary to the cafety and security of Lous Napoleon's dynasty as trade and manufactures are to the prosperity and happiness of the English people. It is difficult to perceive how interests apparently so adverse can long be made to move in one direction, guided by that harmonious concert of will and promptness of action so essential to insure success. The people of England evidently perceive that their complicity with the French Emperor has placed.
